Thinking Place-Politics Through Collaborative Undergraduate Human-Environment Research: Urban Forest Loss and Tree Replanting in Worcester, MA

by Dr. Deborah Martin

A professor of Geography at Clark University in Worcester, Massachusetts, Dr. Deborah Martin is an urban geographer with interests in place identity, local politics, legal geography, qualitative methodologies, and social movements (particularly neighborhood activism). She conducts research on a range of topics (including urban forestry and housing community land trusts, both current projects) coalescing around themes of place identity and place-making, geography and law, local politics, and human-environment relations.
