2013 GUIDE

A Directory of Organizations that Work to Maintain Hill Country Water Resources

HILL COUNTRY

water resources

Hill Country Water Resources include the rivers, streams, creeks, and aquifers found in Central Texas. The Hill Country Water Resources Guide is a reference directory of entities meant for use by any water professional or individuals looking for water information in the region.

This Hill Country Water Resources Guide is a work in progress, and our intention is to update and expand the contents to reflect ongoing changes to expertise in future editions. If you have comments, or if you would like to offer materials to be included in future editions of the water resources guide, please contact us at MeadowsCenter@txstate.edu. Currently, the Guide is only available electronically on this website.

ABOUT THE MEADOWS CENTER FOR WATER & THE ENVIRONMENT

The Meadows Center for Water and the Environment's core mission is to develop and promote programs and techniques for ensuring sustainable water resources for human needs, ecosystem health and economic development. The Meadows Center is committed to helping protect and conserve water resources while promoting economic development and social well-being by:

- advancing scientific and technical knowledge through research on aquatic resources;
- identifying and analyzing socio-economic and political issues affecting water use;
- guiding the development of environmentally sustainable public water policy in Texas; and
- cultivating public awareness and education about water resource issues.

The main focus of The Meadows Center is to promote a holistic approach to the management of water and the environment that affects it, where key principles of sustainability and equitable use guide sound water policy.

San Marcos, TX. 78666

meadowscenter@txstate.edu

In 2004, the area that now comprises the Aquarena Center was placed under the direction of the Meadows Center for Water and the Environment at Texas State University-San Marcos. The Aquarena Center offers numerous interactive environmental activities, including glass bottom boat tours and a freshwater aquarium. In this area, the San Marcos Springs emerge from the Edwards Aquifer to fill Spring Lake and form the San Marcos River, which is a portal into Texas history, geography and ecology. Archaeological research indicates that the area surrounding the springs has been inhabited for some 12,000 years.

★ Located in western Travis County, the Balcones Canyonlands area provides habitat for a number of unique rare and endangered plant and animal species. Distinctive woodlands, wetlands and grasslands cover the ground, and a subsurface honeycomb network of caves, sinkholes and springs contain highly specialized animals adapted to these environments. Still deeper lie a series of aquifers including the Edwards Aquifer that is the primary drinking water source for over 1.5 million central Texas residents.

 Since the early 1970s, B.A.S.S. has taken a proactive response to addressing the nation's vital aquatic resource issues. In the early years, it meant taking legal action against industries making a toxic soup of the nation's waterways. Today, the agenda has grown more complex, and B.A.S.S. follows a parallel path in dealing with the issues through its Conservation program.

 Geronimo Creek and its tributary Alligator Creek are located in Comal and Guadalupe Counties within the larger Guadalupe River Basin. The headwaters of Alligator Creek begin in southeastern Comal County near New Braunfels and its waters flow southeast towards Seguin where it joins with Geronimo Creek. The majority of the Alligator Creek watershed lies within the extra-territorial jurisdiction (ETJ) of New Braunfels while the majority of the Geronimo Creek watershed is within the ETJ of Seguin. This WPP is administered by the TSSWCB, GBRA and Texas A&M Agrilife.

 Created by the Texas Legislature in 1934, the Lower Colorado River Authority (LCRA) is a nonprofit conservation and reclamation district that provides energy, water, and community services to Texans. Operating solely on utility revenues and service fees, the LCRA supplies electricity to more than 1.1 million Texans through more than 40 wholesale customers. Other services provided include flood management; protecting the quality of the lower Colorado River and its tributaries; providing parks and recreational facilities; offering economic development assistance; operating water and wastewater utilities; and providing soil, energy, and water conservation programs.

 The purpose of the South Central Texas Regional Water Planning Group (SCTRWPG), Region L, is to provide comprehensive regional water planning and to carry out the related responsibilities placed on regional water planning groups by state law. Foremost among those responsibilities is the development of a regional water plan for the planning area. The plan identifies both short and long-term water supply needs and recommends water management strategies for addressing them. The plan is updated every five years.

 For centuries, people have relied on rainwater harvesting to supply water for household, landscape, livestock, and agricultural uses. Before the advent of large centralized water supply systems, rainwater was collected from roofs and stored on site in tanks known as cisterns. With the development of large, reliable water treatment and distribution systems and more affordable well drilling equipment, rain harvesting was all but forgotten, even though it offered a source of pure, soft, low-sodium water.
